Not illustrated. 1882 Excerpt: .appeals, then, to the lover of the beauty of nature, to the student of astronomy, physics, physiology, biology, and anthropology, to the searchers in every department of science, but chiefly it appeals to those who have banded themselves together for the observation of nature, and who delight in the brightness of skies and field, and in the beautiful life of birds and animals and flowers. The namo and the work of the field naturalist have become increasingly popular within recent years. It is now nearly fifty years since Rennio published his Field Naturalists Magazine. Tho Manchester Field Naturalists Society, which was probably the first to adopt the title, has had many sister associations, and now there are numerous field clubs in various parts of the country. This journal, whilst officially unconnected with any particular society of Field Naturalists, will strive to bo useful and helpful to...
