Excerpt: . . . her duty, by offering to go and sit with her mother. That mother was the terror of her thoughts and, still more, of her dreams. Sometimes the help would come running late at night. Her mother was screaming for her to come and pray! She hurried along through the clammy Dutch mist. Her mother was dying. Her mother (a Protestant) had no faith in mild Protestant prayers. Redempta must come and help her into heaven! Not after ten, said Lis Doris. Redempta, with circles under her eyes from a brief sleep haunted by yells, Redempta sat tranquilly classifying prints. These were her hours of happiness, out on the heath or more rarely in the silent studio, with hardly a sound throughout the empty house. The whole village of course strongly disapproved. Saskia would come after a time and smilingly fetch her away to her...
