Createspace, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .J. T. Oney is the author of several fictional novels about the Morgan family from the mountains of Eastern Kentucky and books of non-fiction dealing with such varied subjects as war, politics, science, religion, and Islam. In this book the author tells of growing up in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky. Under Part 1, Tales from the Mountains, the author begins with a series of stories about growing up in the mountains of Southeast Kentucky in the 1940s. The period in which the stories occur encompasses the end of the Depression, and was bookended by World War II and the Korean War. They were momentous events in our history that changed our nation s history and set it on a different path. However, because they were isolated in the mountains, the events seemed foreign to the author but did, nevertheless, contribute to his education and view of the world. In a large sense, they also contributed to his eventual desire to continuously observe and analyze the culture in which he lived. The tales take place in the isolation of the mountains of Eastern Kentucky where the next hollow seemed like a foreign country and the people encountered highly idiosyncratic. The tales begin with a Trip to Dayton as the author tells of his first trip outside of the mountain hollows and his encounter with foreign food, a teasing cousin, a brother too young to read, and a father who liked moonshine. The tales continue with Copper John Campbell, his mother s father, a brawling, ill-tempered, hard drinking Scotsman, head of the Campbell clan, who rode his white horse to kill Logan Hicks who lived in Number 9 hollow....
