Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: .distorted, scattered spicules of this type were found on the surface of a thin-bedded layer of limestone, which closely resemble the oblique spicules from Wales. P. fenestrata is represented in the Middle Cambrian fauna of China by cruciform spicules embedded in limestone, that have four slender, round rays meeting at the center of the spicule, but no specimens were found with indications of the skeleton of the sponge. The presence of spicules resembling those of P. fenestrata in the Ceratopyge limestone of Sweden is discussed by Moberg and Segerberg and an illustration given (pl. 1, fig. 5), but with the data available it is difficult to determine if the spicules belong to this species or to P. hicksi or an undetermined species. The same is true of all the spicules from Swedish Cambrian strata referred to P. fenestrata and P. hicksi Rauff (1894)! notes occurrence of species at localities in Norway and Sweden, but with only scattered spicules on which to base identification the determination of authors is necessarily tentative unless there is a considerable amount of material and actual comparison made of typical specimens with those from other localities.
